Overview

Singapore demonstrated to be a prized settlement. By 1820, it was winning income, and after three years, its exchange outperformed that of Penang. In 1824, Singapore's status as a British belonging was formalized by two new arrangements. The first was the Anglo-Dutch Treaty of March 1824, by which the Dutch pulled back all complaints to the British control of Singapore. The second settlement was made with Sultan Hussein and Temenggong Abdur Rahman in August, by which the two proprietors surrendered the island inside and out to the British as an end-result of expanded money instalments and benefits.

Singapore, together with Malacca and Penang, the two British settlements in the Malay Peninsula, turned into the Straits Settlements in 1826, under the control of British India. By 1832, Singapore had turned into the focal point of government for the three zones. On 1 April 1867, the Straits Settlements turned into a Crown Colony under the ward of the Colonial Office in London. The British powers returned in September 1945 and Singapore went under the British Military Administration. At the point when the time of military organization finished in March 1946, the Straits Settlements was broken down. On 1 April 1946, Singapore turned into a Crown Colony. Penang and Malacca turned out to be a piece of the Malayan Union in 1946, and later the Federation of Malaya in 1948.
